'9-11 Mastermind' Just Another Patsy, Says Investigator

After a few torture sessions with CIA interrogators, Khalid Sheikh Mohammed was ready to admit to anything. One of the things he “admitted” was that he’s the “mastermind” behind the 9-11 attacks on America. But could he have pulled off this sophisticated operation? What evidence links him to the crime? And will new facts be allowed at his trial? Doubtful, says Pat Shannan.

INTERNET GIANT TEAMS WITH CIA

The biggest Internet gatekeeper aims to collect data on every citizen on the planet—for what purpose?

Google, a company that millions of people across the globe use for Internet and email services, has admitted that their goal is to collect piles of personal data on all of its users. Google has already created the most comprehensive database of personal information ever assembled, one which they say has the ability to “tell people how to run their lives.” But can the CIA use Google to censor free speech?

ADL Report Goes After New Militia Movement With Same Old Canards

Whenever law-abiding citizens gather in any numbers, the Anti-Defamation League gets nervous, especially when those gathering hold views different from the self-proclaimed arbiter of correct thought. Now the ADL is at it again, systematically smearing the national militia movement in a “bogeyman” report.
